Performance Review

In the one month period ending %(COMMENTARYFORMATTEDDATE)%, the Fund's %(SHARECLASS-NAME[##SHARECLASSTAG])% shares returned %(PERFRETURNS[##SHARECLASSTAG][MONTHLY][NET])%% (net of fees)¹, while the benchmark returned %(BENCHPERFRETURNS[##SHARECLASSTAG][MONTHLY][NET])%%.

This unremarkable headline return masks the high levels of intramonth market volatility witnessed in April. Following the "Liberation Day" tariff announcement at the start of the month, markets sold off aggressively, during which time the portfolio proved resilient, delivering over 600 basis points (bps) of relative outperformance.² After news of a 90-day pause on "non-reciprocal" tariffs, markets rallied strongly to make back all the losses from earlier in the month, during which time the portfolio failed to keep pace with the rising index. Nonetheless, the portfolio has outperformed the MSCI World Index year-to-date, returning a positive +0.43% versus the index's negative -0.92%.

The largest contributor to absolute performance during the month was L'Oréal (+83 bps), which returned an impressive +19% in U.S. dollars (USD) on the back of better-than-expected first quarter 2025 results, with organic growth bolstered by strong demand in Europe and a modestly improving China market. The company also affirmed its strong position in the face of U.S. tariffs, which it expects to be able to manage by virtue of its local production facilities and healthy gross margins. Other key contributors in the month were: SAP (+72 bps), following healthy first quarter results backed by impressive cloud revenue growth (+26% in the quarter) and sharply improving margins;³ and Microsoft (+47 bps), as the share price partly recovered after the first quarter tech sell-off in anticipation of its first quarter results in May.

The largest detractor during the month was UnitedHealth (-55 bps) as the stock fell over 20% on the back of its first quarter results. Despite just a 1%-2% miss on revenue and earnings per share (EPS) relative to consensus – the company's first quarterly earnings miss since 2008 – the decline was largely driven by an unprecedented 12% downgrade to full-year EPS guidance, which took investors by surprise.⁴ We are monitoring the situation closely. Insurance broker Aon (-52 bps) was also weak in the month. The stock had rallied strongly during the first quarter on the back of good results and gave back some of these gains in April as investors took profits. The share price pullback for Aon was further aggravated by its first quarter results, reported in April, which fell modestly short of expectations. Also in the health care sector, Thermo Fisher (-40 bps) was down double digits as management cut full-year guidance, citing negative tariff impacts and changes to U.S. federal spending.

In terms of the relative performance picture, sector allocation was positive in the month, mainly due to the portfolio's avoidance of energy as the sector fell double digits. In terms of stock selection, outperformance in consumer staples was notable; however, this was outweighed by underperformance in health care and financials, given the stock-specific idiosyncrasies explained above.

Market Review

Despite falling more than 10% during the first few days of the month, the MSCI World Net Index rallied strongly to deliver a slightly positive +0.9% in USD in April – albeit a marginally negative -0.4% in local currency as the dollar weakened – taking the index's year-to-date return to -1% USD (-3% local). Extreme macroeconomic and political uncertainty, characterised by President Trump's on-again/off-again tariffs, defined market sentiment in the month. Looking at sectors, energy (-11%) considerably underperformed in April as oil prices plummeted on the back of a supply surge and an uncertain global growth outlook. All other sectors were within 300 bps of the MSCI World Index, with health care (-2%) the only other sector in the red. The defensive utilities and consumer staples sectors (both +4%) were at the top of the leaderboard as investors sought relative safety in predictable, low-volatility stocks. These sectors have delivered an impressive +11% and +10%, respectively, for 2025 so far and are roughly 20 percentage points ahead of information technology and consumer discretionary, which, in a reversal from 2024's performance pattern, have lagged the index considerably on a year-to-date view (-10% and -9%, respectively). Sector performance is shown in USD unless otherwise noted.

Turning to geographies, local currency returns were lower in the major currencies, which strengthened against the dollar, although the performance dispersion for both USD and local currency was similar, with all major markets within a very narrow, approximately 250 bps radius of the overall index. Concerns that the tariffs announced by the U.S. administration, even if partly withdrawn, are likely to be a headwind for growth and earnings saw the U.S. (-1%) deliver negative returns in the month – the only major market to do so in USD. The generally good performance of ex U.S. markets may surprise some, given the potential tariff impact; nonetheless Germany (+8% USD, +2% local), Spain (+7%, +2%) and, to a lesser extent, Japan (+5%, 0%) were comfortably ahead of the index. Switzerland (+5% USD, -3% local) was the other notable outlier, with its local currency returns hurt by the stark appreciation of the Swiss franc against the dollar.

Strategy and Outlook

Extreme geopolitical and U.S. policy uncertainty drove considerable equity market volatility in April; since the start of the century, the VIX index has only ever been higher during the Global Financial Crisis in 2008-09 and at the onset of COVID-19 in 2020. Interestingly, the round trip of markets, which fell double digits in the immediate aftermath of the “Liberation Day” tariff announcement only to recover following news of a 90-day pause, looks to be largely sentiment driven, given that by month-end, multiples were still in line with March levels, while earnings expectations had edged a fraction higher.

While we are not macroeconomic experts, our view is that the announced tariffs,⁵ notwithstanding the 90-day pause for countries outside of China, may pose a major headwind to global growth. Within the U.S. we are seeing falling consumer and business confidence coming through in data, with U.S. consumer confidence slumping to a near five-year low in April. These impacts to the U.S. economy may come on top of other potential U.S. growth headwinds from restricting immigration (and thus labour force growth) and pressures on government spending.

Internationally, major exporters to the U.S. also face significant challenges, and questions remain over companies’ ability to pass on tariff impacts via pricing. There is also the potential for further pressure by the U.S. on the EU and Asia to separate from China on trade, which could mean major disruptions to many supply chains, given the importance of China in manufacturing.

Despite heightened elevated levels of uncertainty, markets still look far from cheap by historical standards, with the MSCI World Index on over 18x forward earnings and the S&P 500 still above 20x.⁶ These multiples are on expected double-digit earnings growth for the next two years⁶ – a level we worried about even before the tariff announcement. Against this backdrop, we would advocate that it makes more sense than ever to own a portfolio of companies with pricing power, recurring revenues and resilient earnings, which: 1) should be well positioned to withstand the direct impact from tariffs, given the portfolio’s high quality characteristics and skew to services; 2) demonstrates stronger top-line growth expectations than the market for 2025; and 3) is currently trading at a negligible premium to the index in free cash flow terms.⁶
